Research

"Information Arrival in Financial Markets" — 2020
Job Market Paper.

We introduce a new high-frequency analysis of options written on the S&P 500, and quantify in real-time the information contained in the probability measure implied by option prices. We find the intraday flow of information summarizing the expected future price of the index is not continuous, and often increases in discrete intervals. This fact is used to identify large-information events over the six years in our sample.

"Information in Risk-Neutral Probabilites" — 2019 with W. Ploberger.

We propose a simple nonparametric estimator of the probability implied by option prices, and use information theory to quantify the uncertainty regarding the future price of the index. We find the majority of the daily information in our approximate risk-neutral measure accrues near maturity according to a logarithmic or power law. No existing theoretical model describes this process.
